

CONTENTS

	Page
Preface . . . . .	ii
Summary . . . . .	iv
The Problem. . . . .	1
Indigenous Health Practitioners: The Primary Health System of the Poor. . . . .	4
Who Are The Indigenous Practitioners?. . . . .	6
AID Activity: How Is AID Involved and What Has It Learned? . . . . .	9
How is AID Involved? . . . . .	9
The Need for Evaluation. . . . .	11
Objections to Indigenous Practitioners. . . . .	13
"Second-class Medicine" for "Second-class Citizens"? . . . . .	13
Quality of Care: Aren't Indigenous Practitioners Dangerous?. . . . .	15
Competition or Collaboration?. . . . .	19
To Eliminate or Build upon Indigenous Health Practices?. . . . .	23
Policy Considerations . . . . .	26
Policy for AID . . . . .	26
The International Policy Context . . . . .	27
Program and Project Guidance . . . . .	29
Recommendations for Sector Studies and Planning. . . . .	34
Conclusion: AID Action Now . . . . .	37
Annex A: Project-Specific Information Needs for Traditional Health Care. . . . .	39
Annex B: WHO Resolution--The Promotion and Development of Training and Research in Traditional Medicine. . . . .	41
Annex C: PAHO Recommendations Regarding the Interaction Between Indigenous Healers and Formal Health Services. . . . .	42
References. . . . .	46