

Acknowledgements

First and foremost, I would like to thank the Thai Khadi Research Institute of Thammasat University for funding this research project and patiently waiting for its output. Since the research was simultaneously done to partially fulfill my study's requirements at Syracuse University, encouragements as well as suggestions from Professors Marshall H. Segall, Alan Mazur, William S. Pooler, William Mangin, Michael P. Freedman, and David H. Rosenbloom were both invaluable and indispensable.

In addition, I am very grateful to my colleagues at the Faculty of Political Science, Thammasat University, whose friendship and supports help sustaining my efforts to finish this project as well as my study. My wife, Jintana, and our children, Thirathorn, Tharathorn, and Thanita, to them I would like to express my admiration for bravely enduring many hardships with me during this rather long-term academic engagement.

Finally, I am solely responsible for the lateness and any possible error of this report.
