

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It is my pleasure to express an official thank you to Professor Delane E. Welsch, the chairman of the thesis committee who spent many hours improving this thesis. I am also indebted to Dr. Ammar Siamwalla, my first advisor, who had spent a lot of time guiding me from the very beginning of thesis proposal through the field survey, thesis writing, organizing and analysing. I thank Dr. Bart Duff for helping me with the questionnaire, for teaching me some of the technology of rice milling, and most of all, for helping obtain both the thesis grant and a valuable 20 day trip to the Philippines to receive training in the research in rice milling. I also thank Professor Welsch and Dr. Ammar for their help in my obtaining the fund and the trip. I thank Mr. Harry Van Ruiten who instructed me about the function of each part of the rice milling machine.

I am also indebted to Mr. Siriboon Nawadhinsukhmember of the thesis committee, for his attentive help in commenting, correcting and improving the thesis, especially in the technology of rice milling and conveying. And to Dr. Sathit Uthaisri, the thesis examiner, who helped with the economic implications part.

Thank you to the Thai Farmers Bank for the two year financial support for my Master Degree study, and to The International Rice Research Institute for the research grant and a trip to the Philippines.

Thank you to Miss Umpun Hirrunvanichakorn, my colleague, who patiently helped me with the field survey and in many other ways. I also appreciate Miss Zeneida Toquero, my special friend at IRRI, for her help with the proposal, the questionnaire and her good company both while I was alone in the Philippines and here in Thailand. Appreciation is also expressed to Mr. Sopon Yoorachatagnern for his help with the field survey and with the calculation of some data, and to Miss Sri-on Somboonsub, for her encouraging me in many friendly ways.

Without the help of these persons this thesis would never have been completed. Of course, they assume no responsibilities for any errors occurring in this thesis.
